“ I'll always remember you as the sweet and always smiling little girl you were when we first met! My friends "kidd sister" lol. "Kidd"... I don't think I've ever called you by anything else.

You were beautiful, sweet, caring... and hurt. Always smiling thru the tears, while seeming to feel half left behind and half not wanted... like you were always searching for a place to belong, and someone to love you, someone to make you safe. I know the truth was you did belong, you were loved, wanted, needed.. always!! I also understand that you weren't able to see that, to believe that, to trust that. I get it. Most of what you suffered was not your fault in anyway, thought not all.

As sad and shocked as I am by all this, there is still a strange peace like undertone to it all. May e it's knowing that you aren't still sad or lonely or lost... Knowing that you are finally out of all your pain. Maybe it's just The Fathers peace for broken heart.

I'm sorry Kidd... sorry if I could've done something more to help you find what you needed inside this life.

And I love ya Kidd... time and tears won't change that.

I want to ask you what it's like there... What is like to look into the face of our Saviour??? What's it like to see your Momma and your Sis again?? I guess one day I'll get my chance.

One last thing I need you to know Kidd... It was my honor get to be a part of your life, however brief. Thank you for that.

See you on the other side Kidd, until rest in peace.

“ My sweet Savona, I will always be grateful and remember fondly how your beautiful smile welcomed me into recovery when I didn't want to be there. I'm heartbroken that I won't see that smile light up every room you walk into but at the same time I am rejoicing that you are no longer tormented by any struggles and that Jesus has His arms around you. You had many loved ones waiting on you in Heaven and knowing that you are reunited with the ones you missed so much truly brings me peace. I love you, Savona and so many others do too. You will be forever remembered as one of the sweetest people I have ever had the pleasure of knowing.
